Intellectual property protections for COVID-19-related diagnostics and therapeutics may soon be waived if the U.S. signs on to an agreement to expand access through the World Trade Organization.

Already in effect for COVID-19 vaccines, this policy, known as Trade-Related

Aspects of Intellectual Property or TRIPS, has implications for manufacturers and investors beyond just COVID-19 targeted products.

Please join us as speakers from trade bodies and affected companies break down the implications this policy could have for companies of all sizes.
