Roscoe C. Howard, Jr. of the Washington, D.C., office and Michael C. Zogby of the New Jersey office served as legal faculty at the 41st Annual National Trial Advocacy College from Jan. 7-12 in Charlottesville, Virginia at the University of Virginia School of Law. The National Trial Advocacy College is a premier trial advocacy program that enables practicing attorneys and law students to sharpen their advocacy skills, including opening and closing arguments, direct and cross-examinations, and expert examinations, with the guidance of trial attorneys, over 20 federal and state court judges, and law school professors from around the country. This intensive program, which also features lectures and demonstrations, culminates in a mock jury trial for each attendee before a state or federal judge and a live jury. Kaitlyn E. Stone of the New Jersey office and Erin Pauley of the Chicago office successfully participated in the nationally renowned program as students this year.
