

Thomas Haskins is a highly sought after trial attorney consistently recognized by his clients and legal industry peers for his ability to navigate large complex disputes in a wide variety of industries and forums. Large companies, both public and private, have not only utilized Thomas for their most complex disputes, but after working with him they have made Thomas their primary litigation advisor.

He has represented financial institutions, registered broker-dealers, investment funds and high-net worth individuals in a broad array of commercial disputes. Thomas's clients value the breadth and depth of his advocacy experience and business know-how, and Thomas handles his clients' most complex matters, including class actions, multidistrict litigations, complex securities and investment disputes, mergers and acquisition litigation, antitrust disputes, and intellectual property matters. Thomas has handled matters in state and federal courts across the United States, as well as internationally, and has appeared in domestic and international arbitrations before the AAA, ICDR, JAMS and FINRA.

As a trial litigator with experience in domestic and international litigation and alternative dispute resolution, Thomas advises on securities matters, antitrust disputes, mergers and acquisitions litigation, labor disputes, and intellectual property matters, and has successfully handled commercial matters and white collar criminal defense covering a wide array of industries, including nuclear technology, complex securities transactions, data ownership and software licensing, complex purchase accounting and partnership disputes, among others.

Thomas started his career with a foremost international law firm advising on compliance with the Office of Foreign Assets Control programs and the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. As a result, he is well-situated to handle large, complex litigations and investigations, and has resolved such matters for several of the world's largest corporations and financial institutions.

Whether in litigation or serving in a holistic advisory role for companies, Thomas takes the time to understand what each client actually needs, and
