

High energy and detail-oriented, Nadine Kohane is committed to learning and understanding her clients' businesses, and guiding them through challenging and critical legal matters. She has a deep-seated dedication to achieving client goals in high-stakes complex litigation, multidistrict litigation and class actions, while also providing counsel regarding risk management and litigation avoidance strategies.

Nadine has substantial experience in successfully and efficiently representing major foreign and domestic manufacturers and distributors in the consumer product, equipment and automotive industries in product liability and toxic tort litigation. She focuses her practice on protecting her clients, their brands and their products, even before any potential lawsuit is ever filed.

She has served as national coordinating counsel in the defense of lawsuits arising from product liability, warranty, negligence, and related claims, and has served as New York and New Jersey trial counsel in the defense of product liability claims and toxic tort claims in the realm of asbestos litigation.

Because of how she is able to connect to her clients and their cases, Nadine is known for taking a fresh and innovative approach in every aspect of litigation, from early pleadings stages through sophisticated multifaceted discovery, dispositive motion practice, alternative dispute resolution, and trial.

A few examples of her experience include:

- Coordinated the national defense of a major international automotive manufacturer and its domestic distribution arm against toxic tort claims in the realm of asbestos litigation and product liability claims related to vehicle stability, airbags and restraints, crashworthiness, seats, fuel systems, braking systems, electrical systems and control
