Class action litigation is rising quickly in the wake of the pandemic and patterns are starting to emerge. Our team of attorneys from the Litigation and Labor and Employment departments will take a deep dive into the specifics of what is happening now and what to expect as we advance further into 2020. Topics for discussion include:

- Targeted industries and frequent business models under attack in consumer class action suits, such as recurring fees and price gouging. States, like California, Florida and New York, continue to be hot spots for these suits to be filed,
- Workplace class and collective action trends and employer considerations in the age of COVID-19
- Securities-focused class action trends stemming from COVID-19

- What you can do now to start preparing yourself for what is ahead
