Barnes & Thornburg Adds Intellectual Property Litigator Seth Gold In Los Angeles

November 19, 2019 | Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES – Barnes & Thornburg has added Seth Gold as partner in the Intellectual Property Department in Los Angeles. Gold handles high-intensity, complicated intellectual property litigation on behalf of his clients.

“For many emerging companies in California, their intellectual property is their most valuable asset and Seth is a fierce defender of those assets,” said Julia Gard, chair of the firm’s Intellectual Property Department. “He has deep experience litigating copyright and trademark infringement matters, as well as trade secret disputes, and brings a wealth of knowledge related to those proceedings.”

Gold concentrates on a variety of intellectual property and commercial litigation matters, including trials and appeals in state and federal courts. He also focuses on issues related to false advertising, online advertising across digital platforms, brand protection and enforcement, and intellectual property transactions.

Gold counsels individuals, publicly traded and privately held companies, emerging technology companies and a variety of organizations in the entertainment and new media sectors. Gold assists these companies in navigating issues stemming from Federal Trade Commission regulations, the Digital Millennium Copyright Act, the Communications Decency Act and the First Amendment.

“Seth is a highly regarded and well-established practitioner in Los Angeles’ entertainment and technology industries,” said David Allen, Los Angeles office managing partner. “The breadth and depth of Seth’s experience is impressive, as is the high-caliber legal service he offers to
