Scott Godes, partner and co-chair of the firm's Data Security and Privacy Practice Group, was recently quoted in "Insurance Regulation And Legislation: Midyear Report," published by Law360. In the article, Scott pointed out that European authorities have stated that the Privacy Shield ensures that every complaint against a company over purportedly lax data security practices will be dealt with and resolved. As such, corporate policyholders engaging in trans-Atlantic data transfers need to re-examine their insurance programs and make sure their coverage is broad enough to address the costs of responding to consumer and regulatory actions.
