

Steve Fink was a traditional real estate lawyer who also litigated. He advised on real estate transactions, land use and zoning, eminent domain, construction, and local counsel opinions. He also represented clients in litigation involving real estate and in commercial disputes, including bankruptcy.

As a young lawyer, Steve was a commercial litigator primarily representing creditors in state and federal courts, including bankruptcy courts. His clients frequently took title to real estate, and asked Steve to assist in the disposition of this real estate. This real estate was often distressed for a variety of reasons, and as a result, years ago, Steve gained significant experience in both litigation and commercial real estate.

Steve was involved in litigation and transactions involving office buildings, strip malls, hotels, apartments, a swimming complex, a marina, incomplete housing developments, industrial parks, funeral homes, railroads and right of ways, manufacturing facilities, signage, livestock operations, gravel pits, schools, a college campus, and farming operations. He represented a variety of businesses in real estate development, land use and zoning matters. He also regularly represented parties in construction disputes, property disputes, eminent domain, and all sorts of commercial litigation.

Steve is the author of Acquiring Distressed Commercial Real Estate, and co-author of The Bankruptcy Code and Indiana's Mechanic's Lien Law. He was seminar co-chairman, speaker and author for "Foreclosure and Repossession in Indiana," sponsored by the National Business Institute. He spoke on bankruptcy issues at an ICLEF seminar titled "Issues in Commercial Real Estate."
