As employers continue to navigate the ever-changing workplace landscape in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic, there remains a critical issue companies cannot lose sight of: union organizing.

Unions across the country are preparing – and already have started – to launch attempts to unionize businesses where there is unrest stemming from the virus. Complicating matters is the fact that social distancing requirements are affecting how companies can run campaigns and how the National Labor Relations Board is conducting elections. Join four of our seasoned Labor and Employment partners for a webinar highlighting the big changes you need to know and offering practical insight for you to consider to keep your operations union-free.
